

Contents

Preface to the Second Edition	ix
Foreword by Roger Fisher	xvii
Acknowledgments	xix
Introduction	xxvii
The Problem	1
1 Sort Out the Three Conversations	3
Shift to a Learning Stance	21
The “What Happened?” Conversation	23
2 Stop Arguing About Who’s Right: Explore Each Other’s Stories	25
3 Don’t Assume They Meant It: Disentangle Intent from Impact	44
4 Abandon Blame: Map the Contribution System	58
The Feelings Conversation	83
5 Have Your Feelings (Or They Will Have You)	85

The Identity Conversation	109
6 Ground Your Identity: Ask Yourself What's at Stake	111
Create a Learning Conversation	129
7 What's Your Purpose? When to Raise It and When to Let Go	131
8 Getting Started: Begin from the Third Story	147
9 Learning: Listen from the Inside Out	163
10 Expression: Speak for Yourself with Clarity and Power	185
11 Problem-Solving: Take the Lead	201
12 Putting It All Together	217
Ten Questions People Ask About Difficult Conversations	235
1 It sounds like you're saying everything is relative. Aren't some things just true, and can't someone simply be wrong?	238
2 What if the other person really does have bad intentions — lying, bullying, or intentionally derailing the conversation to get what they want?	244
3 What if the other person is genuinely difficult, perhaps even mentally ill?	249
4 How does this work with someone who has all the power — like my boss?	258
5 If I'm the boss/parent, why can't I just tell my subordinates/children what to do?	264
6 Isn't this a very American approach? How does it work in other cultures?	268

7	What about conversations that aren't face-to-face? What should I do differently if I'm on the phone or e-mail?	273
8	Why do you advise people to "bring feelings into the workplace"? I'm not a therapist, and shouldn't business decisions be made on the merits?	278
9	Who has time for all this in the real world?	283
10	My identity conversation keeps getting stuck in either-or: I'm perfect or I'm horrible. I can't seem to get past that. What can I do?	287
	A Road Map to Difficult Conversations	297
	Notes on Some Relevant Organizations	313